Adaptable Planning in Transit and Development in Today's Environment

We often hear and read about transit and transit-oriented development activity in the news. But what is the current situation in today's environment? How are they evaluated and staying relevant? How do they drive economic development? What is involved? Where are the hot spots? What is currently being planned? Our panel will answer these and other questions that you may have about transit and transit-oriented development and how the benefits produce a higher quality of life with better places to live, work and play.

Join us as the panelists will share:

- Vision of the metro system light rail and bus rapid transit plans
- Case studies that demonstrate how transit stations can be leveraged to attract economic development
- Policies and programs adopted and implemented by the City of St. Louis Park
- Current and future Twin Cities transit-oriented development projects
- Transit corridor investment and financing
